Another, and more notorious, instance of nullification in Texas, was the open and systematic curred to this good Democrat that there was a violation of the Federal Constitution, laws, and treaties, abolishing slavery and the slave trade. A party called Centralists, who were in favor of a stronger government, had long existed in Mexico. The events to which I have recered had gradually augmented that party. This was more particularly the effect of the transactions in Texas; for, in that case, there was acded to the humiliation of the Government, the sting of ingratitude to the nation. "The ungrateful colonists," [tos colonos ingratos.] had become synonymous with Texans. In the rummer of 1834, at Unernavace, a town of Mexico about fifty miles from the capitul, a movement for altering the Constitution, with a view to remedy these disorders, was commranced. It was purely popular. The people of Mexico had endured for ten years a system alien to their habits, inadequate to their wante, and humbling to their pride.

They wisely determined to put an end to this state of thungs; and this determination, on their state of the series in land seas is already Winter-essand evenues with which the sure in land seas is already Winter-essand evenues. White releases and the whole foreign colonist trade of thesis in land seas is already Winter-essand evenues with which the sure in land seas is already Winter-essand evenues. White releases and the whorks for times as large as the whole foreign colonist. What ke are now only in its infancy. It is less then a tithe of what it will be in a few years, provided the Eric Canal shall be enlarged, lake harbors shall be constructed, and the works of internal improvement in the new States shall be constructed, and the works of internal improvement in the new States shall be constituted to the works of internal improvement in the new States shall be constituted. Whit the exception of noble Ohio, and we trust Indiana, all these ograt state of things; and this determination, on their part, constitutes one of the great grievances of the nullifiers and freebooters of Texas. Their instincts did not deceive them. Any change which promised steady supremacy of the law, certain punishment of the guilty, and protection of the good, was ominous of evil to them. In new Constitution was formed. It was upon the principle of centratism, or consolidation; it dispensed with State Legislatures, and substituted for them departments having a legislative council, elected by the people, and a Governor and military commandant, both appointed by the President. Their jurisdiction ex ended only to matters of police, to elections, and to proposi-tions for laws; the legislative and judicial powers being al! vested in the General Government. This Government, however, especially in its excontive branch, was embarrassed by absurd and suicidal checks and rescrictions. The executive council, appointed by the Ligislature, had a veto upon all executive propositions for laws. The judges of the supreme court were appointed by the Congress, and those of interior juri-dictions by those of the supreme court. By the Federal onstitution they could be temporarily suspended for dilatoriness or corruption, but by the new Constitution they were exempted from this re-sponsibility; the consequence of which was, that ministration of justice, crime increased, especially highway robbery, of which we heard much in the the same cause commerce was obstructed and retained. The legislative power consisted of a Champer of Deputies about seventy five in num-ber, and a Senate consisting of forty eight. Their qualifications, and those of electors, were the me as under the Federal Constitution, and the Unfortunately, the jealousy which the Mexicans still cherished of the central power, induced them to adopt one of the very worst leatures of our old Articles of Confederation. The new Constitution required that any tax or impost, in or der to be valid, should have the assent of threefourths of the departments, to be declared by the legislative councils. But the most permicious principle of the new system remains to be mentioned. There was a fourth, called the Conservative power, (poder conservative;) it was invested in five persons. Their function was to annul all laws and judicial decisions which they deemed contrary to the Constitution.

Such was the new government, powerless, and enough, one would suppose, to satisfy the most seditious. But the revolutionary con spirators and freebooters of Texas determined, by anticipation, (for it was not formed until after the battle of San Jacinto,) that it was so despolic as to justify insurrection and civil war. This clamsy contrivance for a government was framed with an overweening jeulousy of the personal popularity and influence of Santa Aña. This was the cause of its unwieldiness and inefficiency, and this constitutes an overwhelming answer to the reiterated and contemptible charge of the brigands, such as shot poor Boatright, about the bloody despotism of Santa Aña, and the meen and dastardly submission of the Mexiany existence, except in the libels issued from the press in Texas and New Orleans, and reto the other. Nor have they been confined to this continent. The embezzing embassador, James Hamilton, and his conductes, the swindling land and loan agents of the revolutionists, have propagated them in Europe, in some isstances, through the most respectable period cal publications, and more largely through pamphle s in different languages.

During five years the Mexicans worried along with the absurd and paralyzing system I have described; the government being incapable of bringing out and combining the resources of the nation, so as to enforce order and submission to the laws at home, or to command rescent abroad. On the 28th or September, 1841, Santa Ana, and the officers of the army, established and proclaimed the plan known as "the Basis of Tacubaya," so called from the name of the town where it was agreed upon. It provided for celling a convention to form a Constitution, and for a provisional government in the interim. Santa An was appointed provisi nal President, with no limitation of powers except "to consult the public good." The provisional President appears to have used his high and extraordinary powerwith moderation and justice. A convention was held, and formed a Constitution, which was entistantially a restoration of an old federal system. The army, and so far as I can judge from th-Mexican papers, the people, have dis pproved of this, and a new convention was assembled, and in now in session. It was selected by the Presi dent, and comprises the nighest talent, learning, and re-pentability of the whole country. The prospect 1s, that now, at last, M. xio, will have a maidtaining order, enforcing law, delending and improving the noble country, which is the intern tance of a gentle, generous, and hereic people This I affirm with great confidence, that none but a representative republican government can be parmagedly established there. If Santa Ana is actuated by an unprincipled and all grasping umbains of which there is no prod, Ine well known de ermination of the people on this point, and the tragical face of the father of their independence, the once-believed Iturbid-, would dolor hon from reneating the experinot be sutherent, he want he very sure to share his fate. It "boody instruction" is demanded anew, the Mexicans are prepared to repeat it. It may possibly shake our confidence in our as sumed supercurry, if we reflect what might have been our Lit, if Washington had preved a traitor and usurper, and the people had been brought to the terrible alternative of submitting to a despotism, or shooting him down by a guard detailed from the veteran army, which the beloved chief had led to victory!

Another, and more notorious, instance of nulfication in Texas, was the open and systematic. trade, which was conducted through the island of Cuba, under the protection and agency of the United States consul at Havana.

Another branch of nullification in Mexico was the assumption, by the State Legislatures, of power in disposing of the public lands. These lands, in Mexico as in the United States, form an interest of incalculable value and importance, which is committed there, as here, exclusively to the jurisdiction of the General Government. In 1834, the Legislature of Coahula and Texas

The do-nothing policy, or the down-hill progress. the policy will doubtless be illustrated by a dis-play of all the imaginary advantages of Free Trade, no harbors, no internal improvements, a hard money Sub Tressury for this State and for the Nation, with the price of labor and its products, land and its fruits brought down to the gold and silver standard; or as Mr. Buchanan has it, "down to the common standard of the world" [Buff-lo Com.
